Galloway Township, NJ– The Holocaust Resource Center of The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey will present a full day workshop, entitled “Educating Students through Living History,” on Wednesday, September 26, 2007, for educators who teach grades 4-12. This workshop will be held in Stockton’s Townsend Residential Life Center, from 9:30 AM to 2:30 PM. The cost is free and includes classroom resource materials for the teacher participants.

This workshop will focus on the implementation of the New Jersey Holocaust and Genocide Mandate for Grades 4-12. The skills that can be used in the classroom by reading memoirs and other literature written by Holocaust survivors will be presented and discussed. Holocaust survivors from Atlantic and Cape May Counties who are authors of the memoirs will be presenters, along with others associated with Stockton’s Holocaust Resource Center.

Educators who attend the workshop will acquire the following skills for themselves and their students: editing, interpreting, interviewing, listening, researching, and writing. The importance of character education and the promotion of understanding, caring, and respect will be discussed. Developing ethical and moral responses will be explored. For additional information or to register, call (609) 652-4699.
